Seeing Red Red Red

By Tan Si Jia

Lately, the political situation in Bangkok has been the red-hot topic and has left many of us based in Bangkok seeing red. All of us have been affected, by the worsening traffic condition, uncertainty; and disruptions to our life and work.

I am a newcomer to Bangkok and this is my first overseas working experience. Needless to say, my loved ones in Singapore are very concerned about my safety. I have managed to keep cool and afloat in the sea of red. Thankfully, I work for a good organization, which is very concerned with the safety of its staff. I receive regular security updates via email and SMS from my organization and when the situation gets too tense, we are allow to work from home.

Another downside of the political situation, the choice of leisure activities in Bangkok has decreased drastically, with SCOT's Ta Gong Jai Lunch being one of the casualties. However, a few of us brave souls still met up for an intimate but casual lunch.
